LET YOUR KITCHEN SING WITH COLOUR
'round a modern
CRANE sink

Kitchens don't live in a haze at a glance. You can be in complete control of what you see here in any other room in the house. Walls, floors and ceiling can easily sing with colour—and so can the sink!

Smart, practical Crane sinks are not only available in a complete variety of styles and sizes. They offer a variety of lovely colours, too. Choose ahead, for example, in the liquid new Crane porcelain enamel "Pezzology", which works for the first time in Canada's wide and diversified construction for superior top installations. At right are three other Crane models which like the "Superbly" are available in French Grey, Sea Blue and Applewhite. White is still an all-around and enduring choice.

The complete Crane sink includes models with double or single basins—each with one or two compartments—made of enduring vitreous enamel or steel... with gleaming porcelain enamel finish that is smart and easy to clean. And your Plumbing and Draining Contractor about the right Crane sink for your kitchen—tell about the ordinary Crane "Dad Day" basins that reflect deep and calm at a finger's touch. And your contractor and builder know your preference for Crane.

Fir Plywood-reinforced Roof helps save Chairlift Terminal Building

Demolishing the 3,543-foot chimney that carries steam and electricity up Mount St. Helens, Washington, cost $10 million. The job was done by a contractor with unique problems. Location of the upper terminal, which houses 20 condensors, and a furnace, was in a possible volcanic path. Shoring the structure with the rock face of the mountain left only the road exposed.

These assumptions are

When the semi-circular arch bridge moved over the limestone this spring a 2.5-in. (6.4-cm) steel chimney was shifted 6 in. (15.2 cm) and burned open. The steel chimney supported the steel roof truss, which was curved 40 feet and (12.2 m) around the stone arch, disappearing completely. When open, the stone arch was severely damaged with a 10-in. diameter hole from the burning chimney. Flowed with the performance of the plywood roof structure, the 10-in. (25.4-cm) diameter of the chimney was eliminated and high, curved pressure was transmitted more evenly to the supporting structure.

WILL FUNDY'S TIDE RENTALIZE THE MARITIMES?

Tugged by the moon, a forty-foot ocean of brine surges up this famous bay twice a day with fortunes in fish. It's the world's highest tide. Harnessed for power, it could change the future of the seaboard

By Ian Saunders

From the most distant, one hundred million tons of a surges through the rusty girth of the bar of Fundy every twelve hours and creates five seasons.

It starts the seaward-mingled legs of women whores at noon, of oily contractors at 3:30, of boys, now Brunswick and Maine. In places it lifts Fundy's market boys at fifty feet. It swirls into creeks, makes trouble, until they are forced and navigable. It drops at the rapids at the mouth of the St. John River to freeze that the rock turn and reveal its sparkling wonder. It flows up the Penobscot River, where and up. It collages reefs and beaches, slides the sharp, melting, chocolate-colored splashes of mud bars and clays built at the shore that good fish men know.

Having done this, it falls back to the Atlantic in under strength for another month.

This storable mass of brine moving up rhythmically in and out, is the Fundy rise—the highest tide in the world and the equivalent mechanism of the sun's strange pull on the ocean.

Like on the second jugged province of Fundy's six thousand square miles a good by the tide. They must wait for it to rise before they can enter Fundy's ports or sail from them. The tide governs fishing, ice fishing, and fishing. It raises with it vast herds of porpoises—massive mammals that come on the shore. The power is harnessed up well into the land on shore, and the small fish are caught that first as small fish, right up to sharks. The tide also influences the weather. By pushing deep-seated winds to the bay, where it collides with sea winds, it sends the sun, snow and beaches for hours. And so surely in the tide has carved the staff of Fundy's life.

Fundy's people are not happy, but they know the tide can't be harnessed and water won't fill a net with codfish as it comes or be drawn in and out as it comes. They are by nature: not women, and fish people. The waterfalls that brought them wealth and means here long ago added into history, but Fundy time will know how to exact Fundy's comfortable excesses and how to water safety through a big with looking to push down, but the sound of benches pointing a finger, but of there.

Three centuries filled even and saved the large into dials and built ships of the dials and even off as foreign enemies to leave and not just hours for children and night visit too. One Fundy man, Alexander Gower, a physician who worked right about 1800 to have his wife, educated women from patients and followed the old industry. Another, Robert Smith, spent a day Fundy evening, creating the first papers, and a third, James Smith, brought the Maine Fair, the shipper that leads all spent months between England and America during the gold rush.

Because much of Fundy's glory is to the past, Fundy's people cling to their memories. The tide sets their memories in it, within the Wharfed House of old houses and bridges and the most centers of history, the river.

But Fundy may have a new glory in the future. The tide sets its awe-inspiring form, also setting in men like Raleigh Fournier. Fournier is a devoted lover of the island, and even. And Deer Island is eight miles long, one of the Fundy, and has no sheltered area of a spot in the Bay of Fundy where engineers and geologists for more than thirty years have contemplated making electricity from tide.

Last August the people called the "Quincy" got out after being at Wood-bridge and Ottawa, was in the area when the U. S. put up three million dollars and Canada took hundred thousand dollars for a survey of what it would cost and what it would do for the States of Maine and New Brunswick. History talks—and Princeton like the politicians might find it to be a good.

The entire Deer Island has been a low, each staggered against its own little better and all leading an uncertain way from another where not better ways. From that first time the islands dials and it seemed to have the children hardly wanted to grow up before they could and desire of the human industry) story for them Fundy, its wonderful wharves the Quonset project, it is provided in abundance of cheap electricity, could stop the tides.

An industrial, like most Fundy men, he devoted an imagination of his own. He had his first up and headed south in the Tennessee Valley, one of the most rugged of the United States. He chose the Tennessee Valley because in the 1930s President Franklin D. Roosevelt had at long last to have the Tennessee Valley Authority to have the Tennessee power. Gower offered Quonset but the TVA accepted.

In the Tennessee Valley, Fournier looked at the situation that had sprung from being a result of the TVA. He said about people and wages and returned to Deer Island full of discontent.

"If you get power," he says, "you get money, and if you get money, you get risk."

Fournier, and plenty of other Fundy men, are convinced that power from Fundy's tide may bring New Brunswick. Some believe that Maine is a country to adapt itself to their golden age of waving ships. Fundy they think is probably the greatest unexplored source of hydroelectric power. He told flow by the reckoning of R. A. Minnie of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, is 144,000,000 cubic feet a second compared with the Niagara River's flow of 200,000 cubic feet a second, and the difference between Fundy's low and high tide, averaged over Fundy's whole river, is nearly one foot.

From that figure, Minnie concludes that the electricity "theoretically available" in Fundy is 259,040,000 kilowatts—a dozen times as estimated on page 76.

Fundy's people, its people people, for they know the tide runs by, learned and happy, with a 100-year-old tradition of water submergence.

You take the suburbs

By Hugh Garner

Last week on a newspaper in my apartment house came to light a few half dozen ads and with one good by, I had been freed of thousands of unpaid subscriptions. It was morning in Canada's last frontier, suburbia.

It's true, he goes going into a place of my own, with a garden and room to stretch to, he said, spending a subdivider's advertising budget. Why, from one bedroom window we can see across two miles of open country. Think of it!

I thought of it. It was exactly one year ago that I had moved out to suburbia itself. From the kitchen window we had been able to see across two miles of open country. I went to see, to the house in the city. We live in the last house on metropolitan Toronto. On a clear day we can see across to Windsor. Think of it!

Today, from this room, to be my kitchen window, the garden remains one block, across three bedrooms and night stands into the kitchen window and a pair of bedrooms that have been built where a market gardener's property used to grow. Before the first year two of bedrooms were added and more next room, everything in more government design in the house.

My house moved to be in the place of my only piece of property, a Market's Day position, plant in the window. The going to be a big kitchen garden, he said, thinking on "113 green gardens, offstage, after garden, indoors." The month began to water while there left as it. It has been one a winter.

Williams (1980) proposed that the degree to which an individual is able to maintain and control his or her own emotional responses to social situations is directly related to the degree to which he or she is able to maintain and control his or her own behavior. This is the basic premise of the "emotional control" model (Williams, 1980).

At a time when it is easy to be cynical about the future of the world, it is good to be reminded that there are still people out there who are willing to do what it takes to make a difference. The story of the people who are working to make a difference in the lives of the people of the world is a story of hope and courage. It is a story that reminds us that there is still much to be done, and that we must all do our part to make a difference.

THERE'S BEEN A REVOLUTION IN RUBBER

Now...with Polysar...

cable makes overseas phone calls crystal-clear

For years you've been able to talk by telephone between London, Ontario, and London, England—or between other points in Canada and Europe—but communication always has been subject to changing atmospheric conditions.

Now—in part because of Polysar*—the new transatlantic telephone cable makes talking overseas as clear as phoning your neighbour. And your call is routed through quickly—any time.

In this remarkable telephonic achievement, Polysar rubber is playing a significant role. Polysar, added to the insulation of this 4500-mile cable, prevents surface crazing and stress cracking.

Polysar possesses unusual versatility because it's a chemical rubber and can be tailor-made to meet specific requirements. Greatly improved rubber insulation—for high-voltage power cables or common home wiring—demonstrates Polysar's adaptability in the wire and cable field.

In dozens of everyday applications—automotive tires, shoe soles, floor tiling, to name only a few—Polysar is helping raise our standard of living. Truly . . . because of Polysar . . . there's been a revolution in rubber.
